Leigh Fitzpatrick Snead is a Fellow for the Catholic Association and co-host of the nationally syndicated radio show Conversations with Consequences. She is a writer, editor, speaker, and mother of four whose work engages questions of popular culture, motherhood, family, and the Church. Her writing has been featured in various media outlets, including National Review, National Catholic Register, the Washington Times, Aleteia, the Washington Examiner, Theology of Home, and Newsweek. She has been an invited speaker on topics such as adoption, family, infertility, and modern Catholic courtship at the University of Notre Dame's Vita Institute, the Edith Stein Project, the Napa Institute, and the Catholic Women's Forum. When she's not writing or mothering Leigh enjoys cooking for friends, multistep skin-care routines, reading books about the USSR, and watching true crime documentaries. She and her husband of twenty-six glorious years live in Granger, Indiana, with their four marvelous sons.

Suggested Talking Points:

- What led you to write this book, at this time in your life?
- Who did you write this book for?
- What was the most challenging part of writing this book?
- What practical advice would you give to other women (or couples) suffering the cross of infertility?
- Why do you make a point to never conflate infertility with a call to adoption?
